Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper: a former national security operative, says intelligence agent

January 23, 2011 7:24

Attack ads are the main news in Canada. First, we have the reigning Conservatives under Prime Minister Stephen Harper pointing out the unpatriotic actions of former Liberal Party leader (and former US resident) Michael Ignatieff. Then the opposition Liberals take on Stephen Harper about tax money for fighter jets. And so on.

Why don't the attack ads give us some juicy stuff? Maybe a few lines from WikiLeaks, or from some other whistleblower?

For example, the Liberals could say something about Stephen Harper being a "CSIS [Canadian Security Intelligence Service] operative in the late 1980s and early 1990s." That certainly would be news.

The Conservatives could dig up something about a former Liberal prime minister "who had an affair." That would be news (maybe).

The attack ads could say something about CSIS and its investigation of Preston Manning, how CSIS impersonated journalists, etc.

You can read all about this info for attack ads provided by Gareth Llewellyn, a former CBSA (Canada Border Services Agency) "intelligence analyst cleared to Top Secret Special Access, one of the highest in government..."
